New York City – Winemaker and sommelier André Hueston Mack ended 2012 on a great note by selling over a million dollars of his Mouton Noir wines worldwide and in 17 USA markets. His credibility as an expert on wine and bottle notes has landed him a spot on ABC's new primetime cooking show "The Taste," featuring food experts Anthony Bourdain and Nigella Lawson. Mack will jump start a great new year by appearing on the February 12 episode of the cooking competition as a guest mentor to restaurateur Brian Malarkey's team of contestants.

"I was excited to receive an invitation to mentor the chefs on food and wine pairings. To work with Brian Malarkey was a treat and to be a part of the show's launch was equally as incredible," states Mack who was recently featured in the Wall Street Journal for his business acumen and approach to making wine.
