

Jackie and Me educates, entertains Theater Review

Written by Alysha "AP" Price

Exposure to African-American history doesn't have to be limited to February.

The Children's Theatre Company, 2400 3rd Ave. S, Minneapolis, provided an opportunity to educate while being entertained in "Jackie and Me," a stage play based on the book by Dun Gutman. The main character, Joey Stoshack (Brandon Brooks), is a determined young boy with the special power to travel through time by holding onto baseball cards. When his teacher gives the class an assignment to write a report on a legendary African-American, Joey naturally thinks of the great Jackie Robinson (Ansa Akyea).
