

Samantha Rei empowers women through fashion

Written by Amina Harper, The Art House

With 13 years working in fashion under her belt, Samantha Rei is beginning a new chapter—one that will show an even wider audience that femininity and strength go hand and hand. After a fruitful career under the title Blasphemina's Closet Samantha is branching out into new territory; crafting designs that extend beyond the gothic Lolita style she's known for. Her garments are inspired by the stories of heroines whose soft charms are combined with power and intelligence. Who says you can't look cute and save the world at the same time?

What is your favorite creation; a piece you've made that you're really proud of?

Currently, it's the three-piece coat collection that I made for the Union Depot show. I have a newfound love of wool and I'm going to be doing a lot of stuff with it in the future.

Samantha Rei empowers women through fashion

Written by Amina Harper, The Art House

the rest of your life, what would it be?

What do you hope this is a sign of, or a sign of any other trends that forward designers like full

