For area homeowners, weekends in April are often set aside for spring cleaning. The story is quite the same for Twin Cities nonprofits who need help with landscape clean-up, sorting and pitching, painting, general fix-up and more at their respective facilities. And Comcast reached out to lend a helping hand.

On Saturday morning, April 27, Lynn Mulkern, Comcast project leader, worked with 70 Comcast volunteers at two sites for the Minneapolis Urban League.

Mulkern and her team replaced and refreshed all the red lava rock and mulch around the headquarters on Plymouth Ave. N. Another Comcast group was on site at the Urban League Academy on Blaisdell, mulching, planting flowers and bringing in big flower pots for the entrance to the school.

More than 1,600 Comcast employees, family members and friends volunteered at more than a dozen Twin Cities project sites as a part of Comcast Cares Day during National Volunteer Week. This year marks the company's 12th annual event, with more than 70,000 volunteers at 600 locations in Comcast communities around the country. Rallying around this year's theme, "Making Change Happen," Comcast Cares Day is widely recognized as the nation's largest single-day volunteer effort.
